Aden Treymaine is a firm bachelor living like a hermit in a decrepit old house. He has no time for women or love—or so he says. Yet, raven haired Sullivan sets his blood to boil—not always in a good way—so Aden doesn't see the need to change his life.

When his estranged uncle leaves him an unexpected fortune—with the clause of getting married in one year—Aden's life turns on its head. A busybody aunt and a scheming temptress—eager to be his future wife—add to the confusion. Unused to such attention, Aden releases his frustration in the wrong way. Sullivan is head over heels in love with her lord, but he can't see beyond their constant arguments and bitter attacks. The attraction between them seems to run cold and Sullivan loses hope.

Her mother's advice takes her to Meora, a wise cat who knows both mice and men. Can Meora help Sullivan to repair her broken relationship with Aden, or will they be destined to remain apart forever?
